Truck Driver Serial Killings

In the beginning of 2004, law enforcement officers (LEOs) across the United States identified a pattern of homicides involving the killing of prostitutes that worked in and around truck stops. These killings have taken place over a number of years and initially involved the states of Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas, Mississippi, Pennsylvania, and Indiana.

Over the last year, the FBI and local and state law enforcement agencies have met for joint case consultations, resulting in the identification of several potential suspects. Timelines have been compiled on ten suspects to date, with several more in progress. These timelines, which cover nearly the entire United States, are available to LEOs who have homicide victims meeting the following description: prostitutes working from truck stops, hitchhikers, transients, unidentified dead bodies, and any other victims at risk where the suspect is likely to be a long-haul truck driver.

Victim Vickie Helen Anderson

On October 16, 2003, the body of Vickie Helen Anderson was recovered along the shoulder of the Westbound entrance ramp of Interstate 40 in Gray County, Texas (near McLean). The victim, who remained unidentified until late 2004, was last seen at the Flying J truck stop in Sayre, Oklahoma. The victim is believed to have been carrying a black and tan backpack and an Igloo brand soft-sided cooler bag, bright blue in color. She was last seen wearing a plaid shirt, pants, and either a green sweater or sweatshirt.

The Flying J's video shows the victim talking with an unidentified trucker between 0200 to 0230 hours.

The victim's nude body was recovered later that day around 0815 hours, 80 miles from the Flying J truck stop.
